Sketches of Little OLD NEW YORK by M. McIntyre

Telegram Bureau: Rooms 121-125 Hotel Majestic, West Seventy-second Street.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—"Dynamite Johnny" O'Brien, filibuster and daredevil here of a hundred hairbreadth escapes, is at least in a "darned ticklish position." He is facing the Big Escape in a downtown hotel with pneumonia. He is the man who started the Spanish American war. He is also the man who made General Funston from a newspaper reporter into a human galling gun.

He got his picturesque sobriquet from carrying sixty tons of explosives to Colon in '98 in the waist of a sea going yacht. He lacks but two winters of being eighty. He first met Fred Funston on a filibustering trip to Cinefuegos.

"Funston is a real man," says O'Brien. "He knows just when to disobey orders. Any one who doesn't know that ain't worth shucks; he's good for nothing."

O'Brien's one desire is to see Funston before he meets the great foe.

Fine skating finds New York in the grip of a skating craze such as it has not yielded to for years. The indoor rinks and private skating places are packed to capacity. The "reckless skater" has made his appearance and threatens life and limb. Four skaters were taken from Central Park the first day seriously injured by collisions with the rowdies.

The police report that the beginners are not content to keep their feet and skate but must immediately strike into waltzes and double eights. All such make it more perilous for the rest.

The first moonlight skating party was given in Central Park by Nora Bayes, who has developed into a skating star. After the party broke up they repaired to the Hotel Majestic across the street from the lake where a new checking room for skaters has been opened.

The New York Central has announced that it will put mufflers on its locomotives, so that instead of going "choo-choo-chug" their gentle puffing will sound like the coughing of the wind among the barley. And the L. road in Gotham, spurred to emulation, has decided to make its flat wheels sound like cathedral chimes across the meadows at eventide.

If New Yorkers live long enough they will be happy yet. All that is needed now is for the subway guards to quit slamming the doors, hat room boys to quit snatching your hat like it belonged to them and department store clerks to treat you like you were part human beings.

"Real marriage is a mutual dedication of men and women for evolution of character and soul and the dignity of nobility of parenthood. Some animals have a nobler conception of marriage than some human beings."

Such is the statement of the Rev. William Guthrie, preacher, playwright, pastor of St. Mark's o-the-Bowwerie. He says the raven's highly edifying moral code includes absolute monogamy and not the technical. Man's does not.

Frank O'Brien tells of an American business man who was troubled with galloping despondency which developed suicidal mania. He went to his home on Riverside Drive one evening and took poison but all he got was a headache.

Then he locked his bedroom door and turned on the gas, but the quarter meter stopped before he obtained the desired result. Next he tried to buy ammunition for a revolver but found that Europe had bought the entire supply.

Not having any pull with the New York City government, he could not get a policeman to jump off aetoo get permission to jump off a bridge so as a last resort he sighed and said: "There is nothing to it. Much as I hate traveling, I must go into Mexico with a safe-conduct from Carranza."

The play with "a punch" is now passe. A new production on Broadway announces in screaming headlines that it is "a big human play with a slam." There seems to have been too many of those "remarkable human document" things in New York.

AN OLD PROVERB

It used to be proverbial that every man (and it is certainly no less true of woman) is either a fool or a physician at forty. This means that every intelligent person must learn so much about caring for his own health that by the time he is forty years of age he can almost be reckoned as a physician.

Why, then, is there so much talk by doctors against "self-medication?" A woman can recognize all ordinary ailments without calling on a doctor. If they are ailments distinctive to her sex she generally knows enough to use that greatest of all remedies for such ailments, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and likewise she is familiar with the standard remedies for other diseases.—Advertisement.
